Biography

Jamie Rogers is a solicitor advocate who is widely recognized for his extensive legal and commercial knowledge in the (re)insurance industry.

He routinely deploys this acting on a broad spectrum of contentious and regulatory matters in the sector. As the author of Lloyd's Market guidance on this subject, Jamie is an expert on the application of financial crime legislation in the (re)insurance market – he is the key contact for AML, anti-bribery and economic and trade sanctions advice and regularly speaks at conferences and industry institutions on these issues. Jamie's contentious practice also focuses on claims advice and coverage and agency disputes across various classes of (re)insurance business.

He also regularly defends brokers in professional indemnity disputes. With deep operational experience gained from working in-house at major broking and underwriting institutions, Jamie also advises on all business-as-usual operational legal matters for (re)insurers and brokers alike. This encompasses advising on the regulation of insurance in the UK, the structure and drafting of policy wordings (as well as non-traditional reinsurance structures), distribution and commercial arrangements, as well as other agreements common to the sector. Having spent significant time in the market, Jamie also advises on the conduct of
